The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the study of graphic narrative (graphic novels and comic books) as literature. Though once dismissed as childish or “junk”, these narratives are gaining mainstream popularity and acceptance as legitimate forms of art/storytelling worthy of critical consideration. Throughout the course, students will examine the interplay in these works between literature, comics, and art. What do these narratives ask us to consider about the ways that meaning is both communicated and constructed? What do they tell us about the representation and construction of reality and “truth”? How are text and visual codes used in these narratives to examine the relationship between individuals and their broader social environment? How do contemporary creators of graphic narratives respond to the traditional view of comics as “junk culture”? What can comics and graphic novels tell us about the relationship between popular culture and literary studies?

LEARNING OUTCOMES

Upon successful completion of the course, students will be able to:

- Discuss and evaluate various techniques, rhetorical devices, and visual codes used in graphic narratives and sequential art.
- Understand how ideology is expressed in various course texts.
- Understand the social, political, and cultural contexts that inform course texts.
- Discuss how graphic narrative has evolved though the early twentieth century to the present day.
- Formulate a clear, thoughtful, and complex research paper based on one (or more) of the course texts that demonstrates critical thought.
- Evaluate the extent to which different graphic narratives do/do not conform to traditional literary conventions of storytelling and narrative
